The film was originally due to be released on 1 September 2009, but was pushed back to 25 October 2009. In an interview with Cinema Blend, Webb commented on the reasons behind the film's postponement, saying: "It's been postponed from September. Why? [...] That's a great question. I had a nervous breakdown in the middle of writing it. I wasn't happy with it. So it's been put aside. It's not dead." In a 2008 interview with Variety, Webb also discussed the possibility of a television series adaptation, stating that he would be interested in producing a TV series based on Iron Man in the same vein as Fox's 24. "[A] TV series would be great for the character. It'd allow us to go into all these other avenues." Mark Weingartner, Executive Vice President, Warner Bros. Pictures, speaking with Screen International, explained why the film was postponed, saying: "We had a lot of time but it was ultimately about where the film should go and as Clint said, the story needed to be worked through." On 20 August 2009, Whedon was quoted saying that he had "started work on a draft" for a screenplay for a second movie. In a later interview with HitFix, however, he said that the plan had changed to an untitled sequel, which would not include a new actor to play Iron Man. He later commented that if he had the script to the film he planned on making, he would "throw [Tony] Stark under the bus". In January 2010, Webb commented that the film would be set in "some ungodly city," that he was "still writing the sequel," and that it would be a "re-invigoration" of the "franchise," with "claustrophobia" and "drone planes". He also stated that he would "probably direct" the sequel. Webb again commented on the sequel in May 2010, saying: "I hope that I can make the second one and get this one into production before [director] Jon [Boe Tveit] leaves to make the second Thor." In December 2010, Webb and Marvel Studios president Kevin Feige hinted that the character would play a role in the tenth season of the television series The Avengers. In January 2011, Webb commented that the third installment would feature the Tesseract and that the film was "probably two or three years away." Webb later commented in August 2011, 82157476af
